
ERIC GRAVELY

COACH. DEVELOP. TRANSFORM.

YOUR PERSONAL SALES AVATAR

The Analytical

Precise. Prepared. Right more often than lucky.

WHAT THIS MEANS

You need to understand before you act. You trust data over vibes, verify what others assume, and hate being wrong more than you enjoy being praised. Your standards are high — mostly for yourself — and “because I said so” has never once worked on you. People come to you when the answer actually matters.

HOW THIS SHOWS UP WHEN YOU SELL

You're the expert. Complex, technical, high-scrutiny sales are your home field — procurement processes that exhaust other reps are where you pull ahead. What works for you: airtight business cases, demos with real depth, and written follow-ups that answer the buyer's questions before they've asked them. When the deal comes down to evidence, you beat louder reps every time.

Your blind spot: You over-prove and under-ask. You keep presenting evidence after the buyer is already convinced, and emotional buyers check out while you're still on slide 14. Precision wins trust; it doesn't close deals. Someone still has to ask.

HOW TO SELL TO EVERY TYPE — AS THE ANALYTICAL

This is where deals are won or lost: selling to people who aren't wired like you.

Selling to the dominant buyers

- They decide on outcomes, not process. Lead with the conclusion.
- Keep the backup analysis in your pocket — bring it out only if challenged.
- Give ONE recommendation, not an options analysis. And move faster than feels safe.

Selling to the ego buyers

- They don't buy spreadsheets — they buy status. Translate your data into what it makes them look like.
- Lead with the marquee outcome or logo; keep the detail as backup.
- Praise their sharp questions. An Ego buyer who feels smart in your meeting buys from you.

Selling to the caring buyers

- Translate your specs into safety: “here's why nothing breaks.”
- Introduce them to support and success people early — humans, not documentation.
- Be the guide, not the professor.

Selling to the analytical buyers (your mirror)

- This becomes a credibility contest. Be rigorous but decisive.
- Two analysts equals analysis paralysis — agree on evaluation criteria upfront.
- Whoever frames the criteria wins the deal. Make sure it's you.