COACH. DEVELOP. TRANSFORM.

YOUR PERSONAL SALES AVATAR

The Caring

Warm. Loyal. The one people actually trust.

WHAT THIS MEANS

You read people quickly, avoid unnecessary conflict, and would rather absorb pressure than pass it on. Being counted on matters more to you than being celebrated. People confide in you fast — sometimes strangers tell you things they haven't told their friends. Your word means something, and you protect that. Harmony isn't weakness to you; it's the whole point.

HOW THIS SHOWS UP WHEN YOU SELL

You're the trust-builder. You win long, relationship-heavy deals and you keep customers other reps would lose — retention and expansion are your natural territory. What works for you: multi-threading deep into accounts, service-led selling, and being the rep buyers actually want to call back. Buyers don't just buy from you; they defend you internally.

Your blind spot: You avoid the ask, so deals drift. You mistake “no pressure” for good selling, when sometimes the most caring thing you can do is force a decision the buyer is avoiding. Your pipeline is full of people who like you and haven't bought anything.

HOW TO SELL TO EVERY TYPE — AS THE CARING

This is where deals are won or lost: selling to people who aren't wired like you.

Selling to the dominant buyers

- They will steamroll you if you let them. Walk in with a point of view and state it.
- Shorten your answers. Bottom line first, context only if asked.
- Ask for the business directly. They respect the ask — hesitation reads as weakness.

Selling to the ego buyers

- They don't just want care — they want admiration. Compliment their wins with specifics.
- Position them as the visionary who found the solution, not someone who needed help.
- Put their name on the win in every recap and every internal email.

Selling to the caring buyers (your mirror)

- Highest trust, slowest deal. Both of you avoid pushing — someone has to.
- Create gentle deadlines tied to THEIR goals (“live before your Q3 kickoff”).
- Name the decision out loud. Comfortable silence is where these deals go to die.

Selling to the analytical buyers

- Strong pairing — you're both deliberate and neither of you oversells.
- Your risk is under-asserting value. Pair your patience with hard proof.
- Document everything. They'll notice, and it compounds trust.
