
ERIC GRAVELY

COACH. DEVELOP. TRANSFORM.

YOUR PERSONAL SALES AVATAR

The Ego

Confident. Magnetic. Always aware of the room.

WHAT THIS MEANS

You care how things look and who's watching — and instead of hiding that, you run on it. You want to be recognized as the best, remembered in every room, and treated as an expert rather than an extra. That drive makes you perform when the stakes are highest. People are drawn to your confidence; a few are threatened by it. Losing privately is survivable. Losing publicly is not.

HOW THIS SHOWS UP WHEN YOU SELL

You're the performer. You win bake-offs, exec pitches, and any room where confidence is contagious — buyers believe you because you believe you. What works for you: big-stage moments, name-brand social proof, building a personal reputation that opens doors before you knock, and positioning yourself as the expert they're lucky to work with, not a vendor chasing them.

Your blind spot: You make the sale about you. You talk past the buyer, over-promise to protect your image, and take objections personally when they're just questions. The deals you lose go to quieter reps who asked better questions while you were performing.

HOW TO SELL TO EVERY TYPE — AS THE EGO

This is where deals are won or lost: selling to people who aren't wired like you.

Selling to the dominant buyers

- They don't care about your highlight reel. Outcomes only — be brief.
- Let them own the decision. Your reputation opens the door; THEIR result closes it.
- Skip the performance. A Dominant buyer smells a show and disqualifies you for it.

Selling to the ego buyers (your mirror)

- Two spotlights, one stage. Hand them the stage on purpose — you can't out-shine your way into their wallet.
- Flatter with specifics, not generics. "Your Q2 turnaround was impressive" beats "you guys are great."
- Sell exclusivity: "we don't take every client." Ego buyers pay for what not everyone gets.

Selling to the caring buyers

- Your polish reads as slick to them. Drop the performance and get real.
- Consistency beats charisma here — show up the same way every single time.
- Make room for their team's voices. A Caring buyer buys for the group, not the spotlight.

Selling to the analytical buyers

- Charisma reads as spin. Replace adjectives with numbers and put everything in writing.
- Underclaim and over-document. Let the receipts brag for you.
- Give them silence to process. Do not fill it — that's the hardest part for you.